“The Carrot Expert wasn’t judgmental. He made us feel comfortable and shared a few different agency options. He even gave us a list of questions that we should be asking and things we should be thinking about as we selected an agency to work with. It made us feel like we knew what we were doing and the we were on the right track.”

Different types of adoption

	What to know	Cost range
Domestic infant adoption	This is also known as private adoption. Both the birth family and adoptive parents are located in the U.S., and adoption professionals typically help coordinate these placements.	$30,000–$50,000
Foster care adoption	If a child in foster care cannot be reunited with their birth parents, they can be adopted by their foster families or through the foster care system.	$0–$2,700 Any expenses are usually offset by the federal adoption tax credit.
Independent adoption <small>Not all states allow independent adoptions, and many states regulate them extensively.</small>	Families or in some instances attorneys independently identify an expectant parent seeking an adoptive family. Attorneys will assist both parties with the adoption process.	$25,000–$45,000
Intercountry adoption	Adopting a child from another country requires compliance with laws in both the child's country of origin and the adoptive parents' country of residence.	$20,000–$60,000
